I Found a Quilted Heart – ifaqh

Would you like to bring a smile to someone, or make their day a little brighter? Check out ifaqh.com. The deal is you make a quilted heart and attach one of the little tags available as a printout on the website. Then you leave it in some random public place for a stranger to find. Two basic rules – don't add anything to the tag (not "You are loved or a scripture or whatever), and don't hand it, send it, or leave it somewhere for one specific person to find – it's supposed to be random. The website is cool too – people can log on and show the heart they found and tell how and where they found it. There's also a search feature, so you can see how many have been found and reported in your state or country, (it's a worldwide thing). Everyone has some scraps to make a few hearts and hang them in random places while on your walks or errands. The also have a Facebook page you can follow.

February Program

Michelle Crisler will be presenting How and Where we get our creative inspiration.
